The Aggressive Behaviors in Dogs group (Agbeh for short), currently with more than 700 experienced dog trainers from around the world, is an Internet discussion group for people who have a strong interest in canine behaviors and training. Members discuss how to modify the behavior of dogs that sometimes exhibit aggressive behaviors toward dogs and/or toward people. Currently the group has just over 3,400 members from around the world.

Read through some of the resources here at the web site to gain a flavor for what to expect in the discussion group. That's located at <http://groups.yahoo.com/group/agbeh>. You may click the "Join Agbeh" button on the left here to subscribe.

To contact Barbara Brill to arrange an appointment for a private dog-behavior consultation in the Rochester, NY geographic area, use the "Contact Us" clickable link at the bottom of the page. An appointment may be arranged on a fee for service basis. I do not do free consults.

Please do not write me a lengthy letter describing your dog's behavior problems in the expectation that I will spend hours of my time reading your message and then preparing a comprehensive training message for you, all with no financial compensation. The free information is already available here at this web site and through the Agbeh group at YahooGroups where I've devoted many hours each week for ten years.

If your dog is exhibiting serious aggressive behaviors, inflicting injury, then it would be wise for you to hire an experienced dog-training professional to evaluate your dog in person and to make recommendations.

Click the FAQs clickable tab to find a listing of professional organizations; most of them have membership directories which are searchable by geographic area. Through that resource, I hope you'll be able to find an experienced dog-behavioral professional within driving distance to assist your efforts.

Thanks for understanding. The aim is to help keep families, their children and their other pets safe from injury.
